The Communication Bill of Rights

to have friendships and social connections to express what and who I want and where I wish to go to say no, protest, or refuse what you offer me to express my emotions and thoughts to make choices from meaningful options to share my opinions and perspectives to seek, receive, and share information to be informed about the people in my life and all events affecting me to access communication services and supports across the lifespan to always have access to working AAC and Assistive Technology to be acknowledged and responded to to actively participate in my community to be treated with dignity and respect to be directly talked to, rather than spoken about to be communicated with in a way that I understand
